Mark Prebble : Managing In-house Legal Services [OP] (Thorogood Reports) before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Managing In-house Legal Services [OP] (Thorogood Reports):

Budget pressures on in-house legal departments in the UK, which become more acute in a tougher economic climate, heighten the need to reach a consensus with business managers as to the respective roles which they, the in-house lawyers and external advisers, have in relation to the cost effective management of legal risk. Every British legal department should have a permanent goal of doing more with less, relentlessly improving performance. This new briefing, written by a successful in-house lawyer and consultant to legal departments with over 30 years experience, provides expert advice on how to manage and develop an effective legal department. It provides insights and expert advice on developing legal services to become a greater business partner and value-added service to your organization. It provides a guide to the busy in-house practitioner, who needs to balance his caseload with the pressures of managing a department. Who will benefit* Heads of Legal departments including sole in-house lawyers * In-house lawyers* Compliance officers* Company secretaries* Private practice lawyers looking to move in-house

About the AuthorMark Prebble was employed for 21 years as an in-house lawyer, during which time he worked for

ICI and The BOC Group plc in the UK, and Biogen and SGS in Switzerland. He held the positions of General Counsel at SGS and Group Legal Adviser at The BOC Group plc. In 1998 he set up Lawyers in Business, an organisation dedicated to developing, coaching and supporting in-house lawyers and promoting more effective use of legal services by businesses.
