Muhammad Abrar : Pakistani Media Law: An International and Comparative Study before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Pakistani Media Law: An International and

Comparative Study:

In 2002, private broadcasters started their own television transmissions after the creation of the Pakistan Electronic Media Authority. This study seeks to identify the challenges that viewers and private electronic media sectors are faced with, and which they need to tackle in order for media laws to be enforced. The book also identifies and analyses the action required to improve upon the current prevailing situation in the private media sector.
