Leah Leneman : Promises, Promises: Marriage Litigation in Scot before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Promises, Promises: Marriage Litigation in Scot:

We share a universality with the emotions and circumstances of 18th and early 19th century couples. Married in church, if they promised themselves to one another or following seduction, the records of disputed marriages open a window into the private and domestic lives of men and women at a time when modern law was being formed.

"In thirteen fascinating chapters and eighteen detailed case studies Leah Leneman covers brilliantly the full spectrum of areas that led to litigation." -- Family History Monthly, June 2004. About the Author Leah Leneman was born in America, but lived and worked in Scotland from 1975. Her books on Scottish social and women's history include Elsie Inglis: founder of battlefield hospitals run entirely by women; and Scottish Suffragettes, both published by NMS.
