Rethinking Police Culture: Officers' Occupational Attitudes (Criminal Justice Recent Scholarship):

Using survey data from two metropolitan police departments, Paoline examines attitudinal similarities and differences among officers. His findings indicate that the attitudinal homogeneity associated with police culture is overstated; he finds multiple attitudinal groups among officers. These differences are less attributable to the officers' background and more related to the shift and area in which they work. In addition, the patrol officers' direct supervisors (sergeants and lieutenants) attitudinally align with their subordinates.

About the Author Eugene A. Paoline III is Assistant Professor in the Department of Criminal Justice Legal Studies, University of Central Florida. His research interests include police socialization and culture, and theoretical development in criminal justice. He earned his Ph.D. in 2000 from the University at Albany, State University of New York.
